

Reviews of The Making of America

The Making of America will serve as a great aid to all of us who serve as members of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution. It belongs in every library throughout the land as must reading, particularly for our youth.

Bicentennial Commission.

I have just completed the reading of the book, The Making of America, and have now placed it in an important position in my law library. When applying the framers' intent to the resolution of constitutional issues, The Making of America is indispensable. The quotations of the writers of the document go to the heart of the problem and make this solution exceedingly clear. It is a book long overdue.

The text was recommended to the resource material by the Social Studies Curriculum Advisory Committee. This committee works under the jurisdiction of the State Textbook Commission. The recommendation of the committee was then acted on by the Commission on November 13, 1986. The Commission at that time voted unanimously to accept the recommendation of the committee. Therefore, it will be suggested to Utah schools that the book be used as resource material for teachers and student use.

I want to thank you for... giving me your book on the Constitution (The Making of America). I read a good deal of it during my flight back to Washington and I found your thoughts interesting, insightful, and enlightening.

I cannot tell you how much admiration I have for your work educating Americans on our most important document. I have said many times that your earlier works provided incentive for me to enter public service. For that I will always be truly grateful.

Senator Jack Kemp

There is no other contemporary source that offers such a thorough compilation of statements by the Framers relating to constitutional interpretation. Furthermore, there are few works that actually attempt to find the Founders' purpose for each phrase of the Constitution. This well-organized approach toward finding the Constitution's substance and meaning has great merit and provides a wealth of material on the Founding Fathers' intentions when drafting the American Constitution.

The National Center for Constitutional Studies, under the leadership of Dr. Cleon Skousen, is doing a fine public service in educating Americans about the principles of the Constitution.
